

I feel that satellite radio is a step in the right direction for America. To have one signal from coast to coast is more convenient, useful, and even practical. To cater to old technologies for financial gain is nothing but greedy and foolish. There is no need to attack one form of media just to promote another. AM didn't go out when FM came along, and neither AM nor FM will die with satellite radio. Books didn't die when TV was introduced and even cable TV didn't suffer from pay channels such as HBO. Just think where vehicles and transportation would be if horse buggiest and wagon wheel makers had tried to lobby against automobile manufacturers. Please consider the people that will be affected, and make the right choice. The consumers are what makes this economy strong, don't punish them for some immediate financial gain.